Property owners with 1–4 units who rent to income-eligible tenants can receive low- to no-cost energy efficiency upgrades

If your rental property has 1-4 units and your tenants are low- to moderate-income, your building may be eligible for low- to no-cost energy efficiency upgrades through New York State's EmPower+ program.

Upgrades may include:

- Replacement of inefficient refrigerators or freezers.
- High-efficient lighting.
- Air sealing to reduce drafts.
- Additional insulation for walls/attic.

Lower energy costs at little or no cost to you

When your tenant(s) applies to EmPower+, some of the energy upgrades are completely covered by NYSERDA at no cost to you. More comprehensive projects may require a contribution from you; however, whether you take advantage of these upgrades is up to you.

What's in it for property owners?

Here are a few reasons why the EmPower+ program makes sense for you:

- Energy efficiency upgrades improve your property without a substantial (or any) investment from you.
- A more comfortable home attracts and retains long-term renters, helping keep your units filled and revenue steady.
- Lower energy costs reduce the financial burden on your tenants, making it easier for them to pay their rent on time.
- Making upgrades at no cost to your tenant improves the relationship and provides added incentive to renew their lease for another year.

About NYSERDA's EmPower+ Program

Though EmPower+, both income-eligible owners and renters of 1-4 family homes are eligible for project incentives. For a project to receive core energy efficiency improvements, rental properties must have approval from the landlord/building owner for work to proceed. For both low and moderate-income 2-4 family homes, if 50% or more of the units are income-eligible for EmPower+, then the entire building is considered income-eligible.
